This is an IAT
accredited course

A.S.P.A requires establishment licences to specify named Individuals who are responsible for overseeing day-to-day husbandry, care and welfare of protected animals. This responsibility lies with the NACWO.

To take up the role of a NACWO, the Home Office requires individuals to complete training accredited by the Institute of Animal Technology.

To meet this requirement the UBS Training Centre are offering a blended course of self-directed learning and live group sessions, covering areas such as legislation, assessing welfare, communication, AWERB and the practicalities of the NACWO role.

By the end of this course you will:

- Be able to demonstrate a sound knowledge of the legislation and ethical issues relating to the care and use of animals in science
- Be fully conversant with the NACWO role
- Be able to demonstrate detailed knowledge of all individuals with roles and responsibilities under ASPA
- Have basic tools to help with dealing with confrontational situations relevant to the use of animals under ASPA
